Rigby Cooke Lawyers' Construction and Major Projects Group Expands

Melbourne, 4 July 2011: Rigby Cooke Lawyers' Construction and Major Projects group has welcomed new partner Jeremy Johnson, who brings over 20 years experience across commercial and construction law for building and construction industry clients across Australia.

"Jeremy's addition to our Construction and Major Projects group, allows Rigby Cooke to increase the breadth of services we can now offer to our clients," said Managing Partner, David Lawson.

"Jeremy's experience negotiating and drafting Australian Standard and project specific contracts and in acting in disputes for principals, contractors and subcontractors in the construction and resources sectors adds depth to the quality of service already available at Rigby Cooke."

Prior to joining Rigby Cooke Jeremy was a partner at Corrs Chambers Westgarth and ran his own specialist Building and Construction practice in Victoria.
